"Negligence in Restaurants - Can You Sue?"

Recently there was a story in the news about a man who was served a meal in a restaurant containing food he was allergic to. The twist is, he was served the food even though he had forewarned the waiter about his allergy when ordering.

Can he successfully sue the waiter or restaurant?

Any action or omission that is the subject of a civil claim, where one person sues another, will fall on a scale from accidental to intentional, with negligence being near the middle of the scale.

An accident is generally defined as an event that could not have been easily expected or prevented. Negligence is an event where a person; (a) fails to provide the proper care that the law requires; (b) acts in a way they could expect harm would occur; or (c) could have easily prevented the harm. Basically think of negligence as extreme carelessness.

The situation involving the waiter would likely be a case of negligence. To establish that a defendant was negligent, the most common approach is to prove the following three things.

First, a duty of care must be recognized by law. Lawyers will look at past cases to see whether waiters are expected to act in a way that ensures that the customers stay safe. If there is no such case, the lawyers will have to establish a new duty of care. It would have to be shown that waiters should be expected to make sure customers don't come to any harm.

Second, it is necessary to show that the waiters acted or failed to act in the required way. The kinds of things that could be expected at a restaurant include, for example, requiring that the waiter ask about allergies or for the restaurant to have a plan to ensure no contact with dangerous food.

Third, damage or harm must have occurred and it must have been because of the waiter's actions. A severe allergic reaction, causing harm to your health would qualify as such.

However, a waiter can raise certain defences. First, for example, imagine that a person with a seafood allergy goes to a seafood restaurant and comes in contact with lobster.

Here, the defence of "voluntary assumption of risk" could be raised because the person should probably have known that there is an extremely high chance of accidental contact with seafood.

Another defence is that the harmed person contributed to the injury. For example, a customer with a strawberry allergy is mistakenly brought a salad with strawberries. If a reasonable person could easily identify the strawberries in the salad, the customer would also be expected to do so and not eat it. By eating the strawberry salad, the customer is acting carelessly and contributing to the injury.

Whether you can successfully sue the waiter or restaurant will depend on a variety of factors. It seems clear that the waiter and restaurant owed the customer a duty of care. If you should find yourself the victim of a severe allergic reaction after notifying the server or the restaurant of your allergy, it is best to consult with a personal injury lawyer to see if your circumstances would give rise to legal action.

Fearless Advocacy - The Dabor Trial

The lawyers, paralegals and staff at Smitiuch Injury Law continue to fearlessly advocate for their clients at both trials and arbitrations. It is the philosophy of the firm to take cases to trial where the other side fails to make a fair and reasonable settlement offer. We have conducted numerous trials and arbitrations in recent years and do not shy away from challenging liability or damages cases. The case of Dabor et al. v. Southbram Holdings Limited et al. (CV-11-417735) is one such example.

On June 3, 2016, a Toronto jury returned a verdict in favour of our clients after three weeks of trial. This action arose from the Plaintiff's fall from a metal stud located above a drop-down ceiling to the floor ten feet below. The Plaintiff suffered a comminuted calcaneous (broken heal) and continues to suffer with significant pain.

This was a unique case in that the Plaintiff was an independent contractor performing regular work at a warehouse owned and occupied by the Defendants' corporations. Neither of the parties had workers' compensation coverage. It was alleged by the Defendants that the Plaintiff was the author of his own misfortune and as an experienced contractor he should have performed the work more carefully. In addition, they argued that the Plaintiff did not raise any safety concerns with the work he was being asked to perform and that he had in fact completed the same task safely one week before his fall.

Even before this case made it to trial, the Defendants had brought a summary judgment motion to try and put a stop to the lawsuit. Peter Cho of Smitiuch Injury Law successfully fought off this motion and the case continued on.

During the trial, we called numerous witnesses, including an orthopaedic surgeon, family physician, specialist pain doctor and a forensic accountant. In the end, the jury found the Defendants 38% responsible for failing to give clear instructions to the Plaintiff, failing to have a safe pathway above the ceiling and failing to provide the necessary equipment for the job. The jury assessed damages at $515,000.00 plus interest and the Plaintiffs beat the Defendants' formal offer to settle.

This verdict was significant because it serves as a warning to owners and occupiers of properties that they must ensure they have the right person to do the job and that their premises must be safe for the work intended to be performed.

Michael Smitiuch and Peter Cho were trial counsel for the Plaintiffs.

Profile Of Aaron Meng Student-at-Law

Smitiuch Injury Law is pleased to introduce Aaron Meng, a Student-at-Law who has been with the firm since July 2016.

Aaron spent much of his childhood in the Toronto area, and is excited to provide legal assistance in the communities where he grew up.

He received his law degree (J.D.) in 2016 from Western University's Faculty of Law where he developed skills to become a strong litigator and successful advocate with the goal of applying his knowledge of the law to assist those in need.

At law school, Aaron significantly contributed to Pro Bono projects, where he assisted underprivileged clients with small claims and family law matters. He volunteered at the community legal clinic in London providing legal services to low-income residents. He was also actively engaged with the East Asian Student Association as an executive member.

Prior to studying law, Aaron earned a Master of Arts degree in Political Science with a focus on Public Policy & Administration and Comparative Politics from McMaster University and an Honours Bachelor of Arts degree in Political Science from the University of Waterloo.

Having previously worked as a Claims Adjuster at one of the largest insurance companies in Canada and spending a summer working at an insurance defence firm, Aaron brings with him a strong understanding of the insurance industry which allows him to skillfully and efficiently engage with the legal issues in personal injury matters.

In his spare time, he enjoys exploring the food scene, travelling and running marathons. He is fully fluent in both Mandarin and Cantonese.

Recently, Aaron successfully passed both his Barrister and Solicitor Licensing Examinations. He is excited to learn from the best at Smitiuch Injury Law and become a contributing member of the team!

Aaron can be reached directly at aaron@sil.lawyer or 416-621-1551, ext. 237.

Concussions

ealth care providers are becoming more aware of the effects of concussions (also known as Acquired Brain Injury - ABI). What was once a, "get up and shake it off" occurrence, has now become a proper assessment with protocols for monitoring the status of the individual as they return to work or sports.

ABI is a physical injury to the brain. It can be caused by a blow to the head, severe rotation of the neck or whiplash, or even from a lack of oxygen. Over 160,000 Canadians suffer brain injuries every year and, with better reporting, that number gets more accurate and thus keeps rising.

About 50% of ABI's come from falls and motor vehicle accidents. While many injuries are mild and fully recover (80 - 90% in 7 - 10 days), many can last for much longer. Some of the symptoms are temporary - headaches, vomiting, concentration issues, memory issues and balance problems. However, some issues can be longer standing - personality changes, sensitivity to light and noise, sleep problems, depression and other psychological issues.

Prognosis for ABI's depends on many factors. Red flags include post traumatic amnesia, history of previous ABI, skull fracture, nausea and dizziness after injury.

Treatment for ABI's is rest, rest, and more rest. Also, those recovering have to limit their exposure to stimulation and thinking that taxes the brain (computer screens and video games).

Return to work or sports is the responsibility of the treating doctor. Premature return increases risks of second impact syndrome (can be fatal).

The seriousness of this condition cannot be overstated. New imaging techniques are developed to show the extent of the injury and direct treatment. Hopefully those tests will help those suffering to have the greatest chance of recovery and advocacy.

Accident Benefits Seminar Goes On The Road

or the past six years Smitiuch Injury Law has hosted an annual Accident Benefits seminar for health care professionals. These seminars, held in Brantford, provided those who are on the front lines in the care of those injured in motor vehicle accidents with the latest information on accident benefits. Previous seminars have always been very well received by those who have attended.

While these seminars have been successful, they are limited to those who are available on that particular day and who can travel to Brantford.

This year we have decided to bring the "show on the road", so-to-speak. Instead of you coming to the Accident Benefits seminar, we will bring the seminar to you, in the convenience of your boardroom on a date that your entire team can participate.

While the topics are flexible depending on the needs of the participants, some suggestions are as follows:

- · Recent changes to accident benefits limits
- · Recent changes to catastrophic impairment criteria
- · Case law updates (how the SABS is being interpreted by Arbitrators and the Court)
- · Personal Injury Law 101 (what do we do and how you help the client's case)
- · How to be an expert witness
- Dealing with problem insurance adjusters
- · How to help get your treatment plans approved

If you are a health care professional and your team is interested in having us speak at your clinic, please contact our Accident Benefits Manager, Chris Jackson at chris@sil.lawyeror416-621-1551.
